Aadvantage provides three convenient ways to buy, so that we can fit into your budget. LOWER Water & Utility BillsIncludes all Service and Parts SUPERIOR Service & Maintenance Plans AvailableEQUIPMENT Cost Includes Installation & ProgrammingFree AAdvantage ConsultationThe BEST Equipment to Choose From LOWER Water & Utility BillsIMPROVED Resident Satisfaction When you own an Apple computer or mobile device, there may come a time when you need to reach out to the company to get assistance. Contacting Apple tech support online is possible through a number of ways, making it convenient to resolve issues related to your devices.Apple Tech Support OnlineContacting Apple to get help with your product is easy. After specifying the product, you can then browse through various issues that might be occurring, such as physical damage, updates and backups, battery and charging and more. You can then browse through typical issues before you get to a page that gives you the option to chat with a tech support representative, receive a phone call, send your device to Apple or take it somewhere to get repairs. Choose the option you want to get assistance.The Apple Support WebsiteYou can also get help with common issues by visiting the Apple Support website. Choose your product, and then you'll see a page with typical issues like forgetting your passcode or battery problems. Clicking on any issue will take you to a web page with helpful information about resolving the issue. If the information on the web page doesn't solve the problem, you can proceed with a formal request for technical help from Apple Support.AppleCare ContactIf you've purchased Apple's limited warranty coverage, you can get help via the AppleCare Help Desk on the Apple website. You'll be able to get assistance with diagnosing hardware and software issues and troubleshooting other types of problems. This is the place to turn for issues with an iPad, iPhone, Mac computer, Apple Watch and more. You can also get help with operating systems and apps.Forgot Your Apple ID?If it's just a matter of being locked out of your device because you forgot your passcode or having an issue with your Apple ID, you can easily get help for this on the Apple website too. Apple enables you to manage your account online by going to your Apple ID account page. You can create a new passcode or find your Apple ID by looking in a couple of places on your device, including your iCloud and iTunes.The Apple Support CommunitySometimes the best place to get tips and help is from your peers who are also using Apple products. Apple enables you to search for a topic or ask a question, then moving to a related community where you will likely find a helpful answer. You can also choose your product and go directly to the corresponding community to browse threads created by other users in need of assistance. MORE FROM QUESTIONSANSWERED.NET Look for the hardware manufacturer's official website by performing a Google search using keywords like "Dell support." Once on the site, look for a section labeled "Support" if you need technical help or "Downloads" if you need drivers. Lifewire has a list of driver download sources that can help you find the files you need. Nearly every hardware manufacturer and software maker on earth provides some kind of online technical support and product information for the products they sell. You need to find a hardware company's technical support information if you plan on downloading drivers from them, calling them for support, downloading a manual, or researching a problem with their hardware or software. Here's how. If you need technical support for a device but you're not sure who made it, you need to identify the hardware before following these instructions. To see your computer information, you can use a system information tool. Finding tech support information for your hardware and software is usually very easy and typically takes less than 10 minutes. Use the search bar at the top of this page to find support information for the manufacturer you're interested in. We don't have a page for every company but you might find one for the manufacturer you need to reach. The next best angle to take is to search for the manufacturer using a major search engine like Google or Bing. For example, let's say you were looking for technical support information for the hardware company AOpen. Some great search terms to find support information for AOpen might be any of these: aopen supportaopen driversaopen technical support Once you find their website, you can use the menus at the top or bottom to find relevant downloads, documentation, support information, contact details, etc. Some smaller companies may not have dedicated self-help areas like bigger companies do but they often have contact information for telephone-based support. If you think this might be the case, try searching strictly for the company name and then do your best to locate this information on their website. At this point, if you haven't found a manufacturer's technical support website after searching through our site, as well as pages of search engine results, it's very likely that the company is out of business or doesn't provide support online. If you're looking for a telephone number, email address, or other direct technical support information, then you're probably just out of luck. If you're looking to download drivers for this hardware, you may still be able to locate them. See our list of driver download sources for some alternative ideas if you can't find the manufacturer website. You might also want to try what's called a driver updater tool. This is a dedicated program that scans your computer's installed hardware and checks the driver version installed against a database of the latest drivers available, somewhat automating the task. See our Free Driver Updater Tools list for the best ones available. Finally, we always recommend that you seek out support elsewhere on the internet, even if it's not directly from the company that made your hardware. Of course, you always have the option of getting "real world" support as well, maybe from a friend, a computer repair shop, or even an online "fix it" outfit. See How Do I Get My Computer Fixed? for your full set of options. Thanks for letting us know! Tell us why! The idea behind Support Tech is to provide links to drivers, patches, updates, and service packs for BIOSes, CD drives, PC components, and operating systems. Support Tech's extensive database includes about 3,500 links; though some are dead, most are still active. The Webmaster has thoughtfully provided a site search, and even included a link to the FCC ID page if you've forgotten a product's manufacturer.
